1. Check the flight status regularly, especially in the days leading up to departure. Airlines often post updates on their websites or mobile apps. 2. Sign up for flight alerts from the airline or a flight tracking service to receive notifications about any changes. 3. Check your email for any communication from the airline, including confirmation emails and itinerary updates. 4. Monitor the weather at your departure and arrival airports, as weather conditions can lead to flight cancellations or delays. 5. Check the status of your travel insurance to understand your coverage in case of a cancellation or delay. 6. Consider travel insurance that covers flight cancellations and delays, providing financial protection in case of unexpected changes. 7. Check the status of your hotel or accommodation if you have one booked, as flight changes may affect your stay. 8. Check the status of your car rental if you have one booked, as flight changes may affect your pickup and drop-off times. 9. Check the status of your visa or passport if you are traveling internationally, as flight changes may affect your entry requirements. 10. Check the status of your travel agency or tour operator if you are traveling with one, as they may have specific policies and procedures for flight changes.	1.
